Biographical Note on Robert Henri

Considered by many art historians and experts to be one of the greatest driving forces in the early-twentieth century revolution in American painting styles, Robert Henri was born in 1865 into surroundings seemingly unlikely for a now-renowned New York City artist. The son of Theresa Gatewood Cozad and Robert Cozad, a one-time professional gambler turned pioneer settler, Robert Henri, born Robert Henry Cozad, was raised with his brother in various settlements in the West before eventually moving to Atlantic City, New Jersey, putting Robert in close proximity to the art culture of New York and Philadelphia.

Interested in art for as long as he could remember, Henri spent most of his adolescence torn between making his way with artistry, or pursuing a career as a writer (his book, The Art Spirit, would eventually allow him to realize this other dream). His parents wisely allowed him to explore his interest in both paths, knowing that he would choose the one he felt was right when ready. At age 21, Henri made his choice and enrolled in Philadelphia's Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts, where he barely missed having the opportunity to study under Thomas Eakins, but still benefited from the instruction of Thomas Anshutz, Eakins' former pupil and torch-bearer for his instructional approach. Although unimpressed with Henri's initial offerings, Anshutz came to be a great fan of the younger artist.

Upon graduating from the Pennsylvania Academy, Henri traveled to Paris to study at the Académie Julian, which was in Henri's time the most popular art school in the city. Henri enjoyed his time there, but found himself disenchanted with the generic "prettiness" of European, and to an increasing extent, American artwork, and along with his friends, sought to redefine the boundaries of acceptable subject material and technique. Henri and his friends saw beauty in truth and believed that scenes and people from real, modern life should be celebrated in works of art. The public and art critics did not agree with this philosophy, and later referred to Henri and his circle of artists as "the Ashcan School" for their devotion to the imagery of common life.

Henri returned the United States in 1891, eventually choosing to relocate to New York City in 1900, which would serve as his home for the rest of his life. While Henri created art his entire life and initially envisioned making his mark purely as an artist, fate would conspire to lead him down a different path. Though he was assigned several classes while completing his schooling in Philadelphia, it was in New York that he realized his true calling in the art world-- the role of the instructor. It is this contribution to American art for which he is most recognized by contemporary art scholars-- though his artwork is considered to show a high degree of high technical skill. Beginning with a reluctantly taken appointment to Veltin School for Girls in 1900, Robert Henri eventually came to understand that he possessed a natural talent for encouraging and inspiring students, which would lead to a position at the New York School of Art, and, eventually, the creation of Henri's own art school. There, his philosophies, with strong groundings in the Thomas Eakins school of thought, were passed on to his student body, with an emphasis on the discovery of individual style over rigorous training in strict technique. It should come as little surprise that, as a result, some of the best-known early twentieth century American artists were Henri alumni: Edward Hopper, George W. Bellows, to name a few. Henri would commonly take promising students under his wing, continually updating "The Eight" with fresh artistic talent.

Robert Henri married twice, first in 1898 to Linda Craige, a Philadelphian and former student of his. Though it was a loving marriage, Linda was of a weak constitution and spent large quantities of time away from Henri and their New York home, due to recurring illness. Upon her death in 1905, Henri remained a bachelor for three years, until marrying cartoonist Marjorie Organ of New York in 1908. Robert Henri shared his life with Marjorie until his death in 1929 at age 64.

Biographical Note on Bennard B. Perlman

Bennard B. Perlman is a former Professor and Chair of the Department of Fine and Applied Arts at the Baltimore City Community College and has lectured extensively on American art. He is the author of many books, including The Lives, Loves, and Art of Arthur B. Davies and The Immortal Eight: American Painting from Eakins to the Armory Show, 1870-1913.

Scope and Contents Note

The Robert Henri Papers of the Delaware Art Museum represents the research material collected by Bennard B. Perlman in preparation for the publication Robert Henri: His Life and Art, 1991. Included are the author's primary correspondence, photographic material, printed matter and newspaper clippings. Perlman contacted galleries, museums, and individuals regarding collections of Henri's works of art, manuscript material, and general affiliations.

Organization of the Collection

Series I. Before 1890-1918

Series I, Before 1890-1918, consists of photographs of Henri drawings and paintings of his early home, teaching, and friends, painting lists, photographs of Henri, and New York cityscapes ranging from before 1890-1918. This series is arranged chronologically.

Series II. 1919-1928

Series II, 1919-1928, consists of folders containing correspondence relating to and reproductions of works of art by Henri between the years 1919 and 1928. The painting lists include unidentified photographs of paintings, paintings not located in record books, photo negatives, receipts, photographs eliminated, letters to museums, and miscellaneous material. This series is arranged chronologically.

Series III. Material A-Z

Series III, Material A-Z, contains information about Henri's art from numerous museums, galleries and collectors, including extensive descriptions of paintings. This series is arranged alphabetically by correspondent.

Series IV. Perlman Research Material

Series IV, Perlman Research Material, contains Perlman's correspondence with individuals and organizations regarding Henri, and includes newspaper clippings and exhibition catalogs. This series is arranged alphabetically by subject, based on Perlman's research divisions.
